

A sociologist's hard life

If you are a sociologist, you got a life of hardships and deprivations. That specially happens in 2015, even more in Italy. The role of research is misvalued, over and over, in our skinny research grants and in the captivating titles of our daily crapspaper. Listening to them you'd get to think a slaughter is worthy more than a researcher. This website is born with two primary aims: first, to give back our work, following the path of open and shared knowledge in which we fondly believe; second, to grant ourselves a showcase, so we can be more visible, and help us reach and get in touch with other researchers, given our intention to gather others to help us follow and complete ongoing (or just imagined) works and to propose new ones.
